Introduction

Gender-based violence GBV has been recognized as a cross-cutting issue affecting the lives of victims from a diversity of dimensions including culture, education, health, economy, psychology, livelihoods and political participation. In fact, violence against women and girls was chosen as one of the critical areas of action following the Beijing Conference. This presents a key opportunity for different players, including government agencies, NGOs, United Nations agencies, and other institutions, to build an understanding on issues of violence and undertake activities to combat violence.

Course Objective of Gender-based Violence Training

- The overall purpose of the training programme is to increase participants' knowledge and understanding of the concept of gender, and gender-based violence, sexuality, and rights.
